FORGERY,-On last Friday a case was disosed of which has been a long time pending before Justice Tibbetts. A prominent business man who failed in business in this city about four years ago, was the defendant. The circumstances of the case are these :- At the time of his failing he employed a man to act as his agent, and to compromise with his creditors at forty or fifty per cent. This arrangement was made with the greater portion of the creditors, but one of them refused to settle with the agent, and consequently his claim was not disposed of, although he has signified his readiness to treat with the man himself, but objected to doing so through the agent. This creditor at length sued the debtor for the amount of his claim, when in the trial, a receipt for $12, or 40 per cent, of the claim of $30 was shown, purporting to be in the hand writing of the creditor. This of course would have ended the matter had not the receipt been pronounced a forgery. The trial on the charge of forgery has demand for room, eating, siceping, &c. The grounds are being fitted up in a superior man ner, and all that the inhabitants can do to make the occasion a creditable and successful one, will be done with a will. Houses are to be thrown open, hotels will be prepared to accommodate great numbers, and several of our lake floating palaces are to be moored at the wharves and used as hotels. Among the best of the hotels is the St. Lawrence, where we found good management, attentive waiters and a general home like, comfortable place. It is admirably kept by J. McKenster, a model landlord, and must be a favorite with visitors. After caliand used as hotels. Among the best of the

Her heart followed the soil. The wheat crop was small—much be-low the average—and in the freit orchards there low the average—and in the fruit orchards there is nothing hopeful to be seen. The apple yield this year is not a yield, there being hardly a sister, Kate—but that's not to the point reader, tithe of the ordinary crop. Many farmers will and from being her husband's intimate friend hardly gather one bushel where they have heretofore gathered hundreds, and the lovers of 'hard eider" must deny themselves that luxury during the coming winter. Peaches and Pears are also almost an entire failure. We must wait and hope for better things next year.

Swirming. - Noah's flood would hardly frown some of the inhabitants of Madison. Wis. At a swimming match there for a prize of a silver goblet, there were seven competitors who entered the lists, of which number one gave up in forty five minutes, another in one hour and twelve minutes, another in two hours and mine minutes, a fourth in four hours and twenty minutes, while the remaining three swam valliantly for five hours and thirty-sever minutes, at the end of which time they left the ings was the winner. find and remedy the difficulty. ROCHESTER .- This city of blood and thunder, of murders, open and secret, has become so in- from the parlor, I felt very certain that Lieut corrigibly wicked that the residents, who care for their lives and property, have been compelled to employ private watchmen in addition to the regular force, in order that they may repose in safety. The Firemen there feel so much aggrieved at the censures passed by the press and population upon their apparent inefficiency at the late fire, that several companies have disbanded and refused to serve any longer. Much indignation is felt on both sides and spirited pelled to employ private watchmen in addition indignation is felt on both sides and spirited lect was their union.

Harry had never spoken much of his courtship, save that Clemence was of noble family, but an orphan, and had been educated in a convent. How or where they had first met, I had never known, but as he spoke then, laughingly, of that adventure in which he had borne the character of hero, while Clemence ran, blushing tanhope was about imparting to me a confer

Another Swindle.—A countryman from the interior of the State was swindled out of night since.

"I do not wonder that Byron wrote in raptures of 'Fair Cadir, rising o'er the dark blue sea!" for to me, this soft clime was delicious—
a very paralize of romance and enjoyment—its very air seemed fragrance—its skies a heaven and I passed days in gazing from the windows of my lodgings, or strolling through the streets or market places, noting the picture-sque costume of its dwellers, or the coquettish grace in which the beautiful domnas wore their manties and adjusted their folds to disulay to ad-

Such reflections were mine in my dreamy hours—and who could help dreaming in Ced 2!—but when strolling through the streets and public places with my brother efficers, I had little care or leisure for moralizing or the post. Besides, I had latterly found a new vein f r my alle thoughts. One Sunday I went to the Church San—, to witness high mass; b t neither curling income wreath, or grand Te Deum, neither arched dome nor image of San't or Virgin, fixed my wandering eye of ear, like the soft, dark eyes and sweet, clear responses of a nun-keeling in the timin of sisters from of a nun keeling in the train of sisters from the Convent Sun Marie in the body of the Antono's dreamy eyes brightened. He replied in a rapid whisper—

"Ah, senor means the beautiful sister San Marie, the Donna Arosemena, daughter of old Jose Arosemena, the wine merchant, who died last year, leaving a royal fortune, which I think our Holy Mother Church's mouth waters for," and he shruged his shoulders expressively.

"What do you mean!" I asked, "do they force her to become a nun against her will!"

"I say nothing—only the donna's guardian is Father Martinez yonder, the prelate; and Father Martinez yonder, the prelate; and when she takes the veil, the Convent of San Marie is a vast deal richer."

And with another shrug, Antonio moves way, as if fearful of further questioning. The Te Deum was in its grandest chorn he organ crashed its deepest peals—the chant ng of priests floated out from the altar, and clouds of white incense rose like foun from burning braziers—but I only saw the fuint rose tint of a rich olive cheek, the drooping his fringing a pair of languishing, almond-shaped eyes, a kneeling form in the grey serge mantle of the nuns, and heard the words—

"If she takes the veil, the Convent of Sar Marie becomes a vast deal richer! "She is not confirmed—she is but a novi among these living, breathing petrifications— she is young and lovely, and perhaps the vic-tim of a designing priest.
